In addition to a minimum age of 21, Our Place Nashville requires all of our residents to work. We don't dictate whether it's for pay or a volunteer job, nor do we specify whether it's part-time or full-time. Three of our residents with intellectual and developmental disabilities work full-time; the rest work part-time, most 20-30 hours per week. More than half also volunteer.

A list of transitional life skills gives you an idea of the skill sets your loved ones will want some mastery of if they are to live successfully on their own – they need to know how to purchase and prepare meals, hopefully healthy ones. They need to know how to manage money, more or less, although they'll probably still need you or your designate to double check their work. They might need reminding to take their meds. But they'll know to lock their door, to not open their door to strangers, etc. People have different levels of abilities on each skill listed, but after evaluating how your loved one is doing with the listed skills, it will give both of you an idea of the types of skills they might want to work on between now and living in a Friendship House.

There is a $150 annual waiting list fee. Our list is on an academic year calendar (because of our graduate student residents) and runs from September – August. The fee is prorated for those coming in at different points of the year (for example, someone getting added to the list in December will pay for nine months @ $12.50/month). You can pay the fee via PayPal or credit card on our website (www.OurPlaceNashville.org), via Venmo (@Carolyn-Naifeh) or by check made out to Our Place Nashville and mailed to 749 Georgetown Drive, Nashville, TN 37205.
